

WASHINGTON, DC--“I am disappointed by today’s vote to repeal Health Care reform. I do not believe that eliminating the health care tax credits for up to 14,300 small businesses and 147,000 families in the First District helps anyone’s health or pocketbook. The United States has the poorest record out of the G7 countries for both life expectancy and infant mortality rates, while spending the most on health care. Repealing health care reform would ensure that we continue down a path of high spending and poor outcomes,” said Congressman John Olver.
